Cybersecurity: My Promise to Protect

I'm in my thirties and I want to work in cybersecurity because I love keeping things safe and organized. I always like to make my home tidy or sort out complicated computer files. This helps me solve problems step by step, which is important for cybersecurity.

Protecting companies from cyber attacks is very important to me. I think it's not just a job, but a duty to keep people's information, privacy, and money safe from hackers. Privacy and owning things are big values for me, and they need strong protection in today's world.

I get more excited about cybersecurity every day. I follow social media accounts about it to learn new things and tips. I like to share this with my family and friends to help them stay safe online, and I don't charge them for it. My passion for cybersecurity is personal, but I also want to make a difference in the world with my work.
